School Board Hear Update on Communications Committee

ALEX MALM
LONDONDERRY TIMES

The School Board received an update from the district's Communications Committee during their Tuesday, Aug. 8, meeting.

It was explained by Amity Small that the communications committee met for the first time in the Spring of 2022 after not meeting during the pandemic.

She explained that as a committee, they decided that the main goal was to get out as much information as possible out into the community.

Over the past year, some of the things Small has said has been accomplished, including sharing what is happening in their schools on social media, providing budget information, doing an overhaul of the website, creating new handles for social media, and "celebrating staff and students."

"Our major undertaking was to celebrate our staff and students for the good things that

Residents Receive Preliminary Home Revaluations Last Week

ALEX MALM
LONDONDERRY TIMES

By now, most homeowners should have received the most recent assessments of the value of their property by the town, but during the Aug. 14 Town Council meeting, Assessor, Steve Hamilton, gave the Council an update about the two-year preliminary revaluations.

Hamilton said the preliminary revaluations had been completed and they were to send them to residents "so people will be able to see the result of the revaluation."

Hamilton stated that the Town Council recently made the shift from having the revaluation every five years to two years, noting it made increases in valuation more manageable.

"It keeps the change in value a more manageable range," Hamilton said.

While the numbers haven't been finalized, Hamilton said it's expected that the values of residential properties went up around 23-24% on average.

"There are going to be some properties that will go up less than that and there are going to be some properties that will go up more than that," Hamilton said.

Hamilton explained that some properties have a more level of attractiveness in the marketplace compared to others, which impacts the values.

"Properties don't change in value in the same way," Hamilton said.

Hamilton added that as part of the letters that will be going to taxpayers is a way for people to be able to make appointments with the assessors so they can meet face to face or on the

PILOT Agreement with New Balance Ok'd by Council

ALEX MALM
LONDONDERRY TIMES

The Town Council was presented with a proposed Payment in lieu of Taxes (PILOT) agreement between the town and the New Balance company during the Aug. 14 meeting.

It was explained by Town Manager, Mike Malaguti, that New Balance received conditional site plan approval by the Planning Board. He added that the first phase of the project would be bringing in about 250 employees and the second phase would bring in 200 employees.

He stated that they are expected to invest about $60 million for property improvements, including having a "significant solar energy component."

Malaguti added the project would be financed through the NH Business Finance Authority, who would own the property for 10-years and lease it to New Balance and would then buy it after 10-years.

Under state law, the town has to negotiate a PILOT since the NH Business Finance Authority is a government entity and doesn't have to pay property taxes.

Malaguti explained that among other things, New Balance was attracted to Londonderry because of the newly created commercial and industrial tax incentive program. Under the PILOT agreement, New Balance would be receiving similar incentives as

School Board Get Update On Summer Enrichment Program

ALEX MALM
LONDONDERRY TIMES

While school has been out for summer, Superintendent, Dan Black, told the School Board during their July 25 meeting that there is plenty going on.

"It's always easy to assume the school district becomes very quiet during the summer. It's actually not quiet at all," Black said.

One of the things happening in the school during the Summer is their Summer enrichment program.

"This is our third year doing it. I think we've done excellent work. Our staff and students have really done a good job thinking through what are the best ways to reinforce the most fundamental math skills at each grade level," Black said.

Black told the School Board that recently the NH Department of Education Commissioner came to Londonderry to talk about their Summer enrichment program. He added that they toured Matthew Thornton, North School, and Londonderry Middle School.

"It was a really nice visit and it was just nice to see our school district get that recognition," Black said.

Black said they were able to get grants from the state to help pay for the program this year and are expecting to use Elementary and Secondary School Emergency Relief Funds next year.

"We do expect we'll be able to offer Summer math academy for one more Summer next year through ESSER grants funding," Black said.

One question raised came from School Board Chair, Bob Slater, who asked how many students participated in the enrichment program this Summer.

Assistant Superintendent, Jason Parent, said they had "really good numbers."

He explained that at North School they had 59 students in the first session and 37 in the second session. At Matthew Thornton they had 44 students participate in the first session and 23 in session two. At South School they had 30 students participate in the program for the first session and 10 in the second one. 27 students participated in the first session at Londonderry Middle School and 16 participated in the second session.

"Those numbers tend to dip as they get more into the Summer and people make plans," Parent said.

Parent stated that they worked to contact as many parents as possible about the program and said "Really great things (are) happening in those classrooms."

Also during the meeting, Parent announced that the Londonderry High School 2023 Lancer Reflections Year Book was recently entered into award competitions.

"Our publication was recognized with special achievement awards for excellence in feature photo, feature spread, feature story, theme development, and cover typographical design and the overall book was evaluated as outstanding earning the highest achievement awards," Parent said.

He had copies of the book ready to show people in the community as well as School Board members.

"It's an outstanding book," Parent said.

Slater Discusses Possible Changes For Purchasing Policy

ALEX MALM
LONDONDERRY TIMES

School Board Chair, Bob Slater, said he has been examining the school district's purchasing policy for about three years.

Now he hopes to bring a series of proposed policy changes in the coming weeks for the School Board to consider adopting.

"The purchasing procedures are a very vital part of how we spend dollars and taxpayer dollars," Slater said during the meeting.

Slater explained that there are a lot of projects put forward, which they have very little to no input on.

One of the proposed changes Slater is expecting to put forward is to change the policy for when purchasing approvals need to go in front of the board.

Currently under the policy purchases, over $100,000 require approval by the superintendent or business administrator and the School Board.

"It should be a much lower value," Slater said.

Slater noted that based on his research, most districts have policies in place for $5,000 to $20,000 before needing approval from their School Boards. He added that he would be proposing to have the district's threshold before requiring board approval to be in that range.

Another part of the current policy also includes requirements for purchase orders between $10,000 to $100,000 to have the signature from the superintendent or business administrator.

Superintendent, Dan Black, said a lot of times they update policies based on reaction to laws and another major reason is that they see a problem they want to solve.

Black said one of the concerns he has with changing the policy is potentially creating hours worth of meeting time being taken up by approving purchases. He added that for example when he was in Keene they had a finance policy committee dedicated to approving purchases based on the policy in place.

Slater said the policy would only be directed toward non education purposes and only about 30 items this year would have been effective based on the proposed policy changes.

"It's outside the realm of educational business," Slater said.

School Board member, Tim Porter, said he also thought it would be good to have more transparency with their finances and for it to take place in a public setting.

"Having our scrutiny involved just makes it that much better," Porter said.

Slater told the School Board that he hopes to have the proposed changes in front of the School Board for a first reading during their Sept. 5 meeting.

"This has been on radar for many years and I would like to start getting this one off the plate," Slater said.

School District's End of Year Finance Report Comes In Under Budget

ALEX MALM
LONDONDERRY TIMES

The School Board heard a finance report during the Tuesday, Aug. 6, meeting, regarding the district's end of the year finances, pending any unexpected changes found by the auditors.

Business Administrator, Lisa McKenney, told the School Board that their general fund revenues, which consists of property taxes and state and local revenue, is expected to be about $340,000 more than expected.

She said the major factor was Special Education Aid, which was about $201,000 more than expected.

For expenditures pending, McKenney added, the final audited numbers the district will most likely come in about $550,000 under budget this year.

"As we close out the fiscal year, expenditures will come in approximately $550,000 below the approved budget," McKenney said.

She noted that due to the number of retirements effective June 2022, it meant a large savings in professional salaries.

"Unfilled positions along with new or incoming employees, who are very often hired at a lower rate than the employee who retired, account for this large variance," McKenney said.

McKenney said the district had a number of unfilled special education positions as well.

"This is reflected with $508,029 budget variance on the salary line. We did, however, contract those services out, and there is a budget over-run in the contracted services line of $505,733," McKenney said. "The number of open positions has decreased from last year, and we are optimistic that it will be even fewer open positions next year."

School Board member, Amanda Butcher, noted that if they don't have the paraeducators in their buildings then it means they have to contract with companies to provide the services.

"If we don't have the paraeducators here we have to go elsewhere to get them and we are paying a premium to get them elsewhere," Butcher said.

Another budget line McKenney pointed to is temporary salary lines.

"Temporary salary costs were over-budget with substitute teacher line accounting for $206,793 of the total $256,668," McKenney said.

McKenney explained to the board that they continue to see a lack of substitutes across the state and because of it schools often have to have teachers fill in for a class throughout the day, which costs more money.

Out of district tuition ended up coming under budget by $221,089 "due to fewer students going out-of-district than was budgeted."

McKenney said after all year end adjustments are completed, she expects the general fund equity balance to be around $1.61 million.

It means the School Board will have decisions to make about what to do in regards to the fund balance.

"As of June 30, 2022, the board approved $1,125,000 be retained in Unassigned Fund Balance," McKenney wrote in a memo. "We will bring final numbers to the board for a decision on Unassigned Fund Balance after the auditors have completed their initial review."

McKenney said if they were to keep the $1.125 million fund balance, then the district would have about $485,000 of funds to decide what to do with. She said the funds could be used to reduce the tax rate or could be retained in the school district's Unassigned Fund Balance.

Black Lays Out School Board Meeting Plans For Upcoming Year

ALEX MALM
LONDONDERRY TIMES

During the Aug. 8 School Board meeting Superintendent, Dan Black, proposed a number of different items he feels should be discussed during board meetings over the course of the school year.

One of the major items expected to be discussed is the proposed Moose Hill project.

"We will continue the building project discussion throughout the Fall on the overcrowding issue and potential Full Day Kindergarten Program," said Black.

He said the goal is to have the new costs in September.

"There's a lot to discuss there," Black said.

Throughout the school year, Black said they will also be continuing to give updates to the School Board on students' learning outcomes. He added that the next one is expected to take place sometime in September.

"Now we have been getting in the habit of doing these data reports," Black said.

Black also noted they may explore looking at renewable energy and what it would mean for the school district.

"This topic has come up at times over the last year, and looking at the larger landscape around opportunities to make more investments in this area to save taxpayer dollars for the longer term can be on the table as well," Black said.

Black told the School Board by next July the district would be releasing an updated 2024-2029 district strategic plan.

ing an updated 2024-2029 district strategic plan.

"That will probably take the whole year to get there," Black said.

Other items include "policy clean up", where a number of policies are expected to be reviewed "because they have not been reviewed or updated in a very long time."

The School Board is also expected to receive periodical updates regarding the implementation of the new cell phone procedures implemented for the middle and high school.

"As the schools adapt to more restrictions on cell phone use for students, we would update the School Board on that large cultural change and what it means for a district policy in time," Black said.

Additionally, the district is expected to receive the results of the district's special education study being currently conducted by the Public Consulting Group.

Black said he expects it to be completed sometime around January or February.

"That could be an ongoing topic," Black said.

Infrastructure and safety updates are also expected to take place during the board meetings.

"We can update the School Board and public on how the planned infrastructure and safety updates are progressing in the schools," Black said.

The next School Board meeting is expected to take place on Sept. 5 at 7 p.m.

Editorial

As we look around the country and see the challenges that small weekly newspapers face in providing what we think is a much-needed source of news coverage to small towns, it was refreshing to see one of the largest news sources in the state take notice of the struggles facing this newspaper over the past year. The Union Leader graciously allowed us to re-print the editorial they ran in their Sunday, Aug. 20, edition.

We are not in Kansas Free Deb Paul

During the past week, global observers were stunned by events in Marion, Kansas. A convergence of small-town politics and zealous law enforcement resulted in a (likely illegal) search and/or confiscation of a weekly newspaper's premises, computer systems, and even the residences of its publishers. These actions are believed to have played a role in the unfortunate passing of one of the publishers.

The tendency of small town politics to exaggerate matters is well-known, often drawing in parties that should exercise greater discretion when applying the law. In Kansas, these dynamics led to the Kansas Bureau of Investigation becoming entangled in the widely criticized raid on the Marion County Record.

Here in New Hampshire, the influence of small-town politics has led to the arrest of a weekly newspaper publisher, Debra Paul of the Londonderry Times.

In November, on the day before Thanksgiving, Deb Paul will be in a courtroom, defending herself against the might of the Attorney General's Office.

Deb Paul stands accused of violating NH RSA 664, titled "POLITICAL EXPENDITURES AND CONTRIBUTIONS," due to her publication of political advertisements that allegedly did not adhere to the exact letter of the law requiring to the signing of ads for town elections and their labeling as "Political Advertising."

Spanning over nine thousand words, RSA 664 mentions the term "advertising" a total of 43 times across six different sections. It specifically imposes just three obligations on those publishing newspapers or periodicals: obtaining approval from candidates for ads by or on behalf of the candidate, submitting political advertising rates to the secretary of state, and not charging different rates to different campaigns. Debra Paul does not appear to be charged with violating any of these three provisions.

At this newspaper, we have had to point out the perplexing advertising regulations in the over nine thousand words of RSA 664, written over six decades, to campaigns, including those of candidates already holding federal office. Despite stipulating that the secretary of state furnish a copy to each person whose name will appear on a state ballot, some continue to assert they are exempt. Faced with the attorney general's demonstrated readiness to arrest and prosecute publishers rather than campaigns for violations, we are left with no option but to demand compliance or decline the advertising.

In small-town elections, the provisions of RSA 664 are less known and considerably less understood. According to a probable cause statement, the attorney general's investigator seemed to personally educate every individual they interviewed that placed an offending advertisement in the Londonderry Times about the election law.

The attorney general's announcement of Deb Paul's arrest indicated she had received warnings on prior occasions regarding the labeling of political advertising. These warnings appear to have shifted the responsibility for education and enforcement of RSA 664 away from the secretary of state and the attorney general, and transferred compliance from campaigns to Deb Paul herself.

The attorney general's FAQ on Election Law details registering complaints for violations against campaigns, not newspaper publishers or billboard painters. If "Trump 2024" is painted on the side of a barn without the label of "Political Advertising," who would be subject to arrest for this violation? Would it be the campaign that commissioned the message, or the individual holding the paintbrush? And if the person wielding the rogue paintbrush had previously received warning letters, would they then be responsible for educating campaigns about RSA 664?

RSA 664 gives the attorney general the authority to issue "... an order requiring the violator to cease and desist from his or her violation. If the attorney general's order is not obeyed, the attorney general or designee may petition the superior court of the county in which the violation occurred for an order of enforcement." On Thanksgiving Eve, the attorney general's office will not be petitioning the court for an order of enforcement; instead, they will be prosecuting Deb Paul for multiple Class A misdemeanors.

Like many small-town publishers, Deb Paul is a polarizing figure. That tends to happen when noses are stuck in places they aren't wanted. Threatening a local publisher with thousands of dollars in fines and possible jail time, while requiring spending many thousands in legal defense costs is a solid way to shut them down. Luckily for the First Amendment, Deb Paul does not crumble that easily and has been fighting. Her prosecution is a misuse of the attorney general's limited resources and creates a chilling effect on local news when it is needed most.

Attorney General John Formella should stop this unnecessary prosecution and focus his resources on educating everyone involved in elections about the laws and regulations they are all expected to follow.

Planning Board OKs Nashua Road Condo Conversion

ALEX MALM
LONDONDERRY TIMES

One of the agenda items during the Aug. 2 Londonderry Planning Board meeting was in regards to a public hearing for a formal review of a condominium conversion at 244 Nashua Road.

Planning Board Chair Art Rugg noted that condominium conversions are considered subdivisions in the state of NH.

It was explained by Allison Lewis who was representing the owner Woodland RNC, LLC that in 2021 they received board approval to have a 10 unit multi family property.

In 2022 however, the new owner bought the property and the project and decided they wanted to convert them into 10 individual condo units instead.

Lewis said that they reviewed the design review comments and addressed them in their proposal.

One of the comments made about what the common area would be.

"The entire parcel will be common area," Lewis said.

She said that the only limited common area would be the units themselves, the decks, and the parking spaces in front of the units. She also noted that all the landscaping would be in common areas and that they wouldn't be proposing any landscaping to be in the limited common areas.

Planning Board Secretary Jake Butler said he was concerned about the name of the association being called Woodland Commons, noting that they already have Woodmont Commons and Woodmont Village. He said that they should check with the fire and police department to make sure the names aren't too similar.

"Maybe a name change," Butler said.

Ex-Officio Ted Combes asked about the wells on the property.

Lewis explained that there would be two wells on the property.

"They service all the units," Lewis said.

One abutter who spoke during the meeting was David Matte He explained that his house is close to the property line and asked if there was a plan to have a barrier between the condors and the back property line.

Rugg explained that it would've been addressed before and that the only thing they were discussing was the condominium conversion.

"That's all in our purview," Rugg said.

The Planning Board ultimately unanimously approved the condominium conversion with the condition of looking into the name of the association.

Also during the meeting, two agenda items were continued until the Sept. 13 meeting at the request of the applicant. One of the agenda items was a public hearing for a conditional use permit for 3,000 square feet of temporary wetland buffer impact for the construction of a sewer line providing sanitary sewer for the 88A Harvey Rd., property. The other was for a public hearing for a site plan review to construct a 58,432 square foot warehouse and storage facility and associated site improvements at the same property.

The Planning Board's next meeting will take place on Sept. 6 at 7 p.m.

New Balance

they could receive under the program.

"New Balance will pay full tax on the existing unimproved value of the property and will receive no incentive against the state education and county tax," Malaguti said.

For year one and two, Malaguti explained that New Balance will pay the equivalent of the local municipal and education tax on the improved value of the property, but will receive an incentive that will reduce the amount by 5 and 10 percent.

In year three, when the building is expected to be at full value, New Balance would receive a 50 percent incentive, which would be reduced by five percent every year until New Balance pays full taxes when they own the property after 10-years.

"It's fitting that the first user to take advantage of this program is a great American brand, which unlike too many companies that have been offshoring manufacturing jobs in recent years is leaning into US based manufacturing," Malaguti said.

Malaguti said they would receive what they currently receive for the taxes at the property

"plus a great bit more."

Town Council Chair, John Farrell, noted that they have a PILOT agreement with Manchester Airport for a little under a million dollars a year.

He said non-profits aren't obligated to pay property taxes and PILOT agreements protect the town by receiving some type of tax revenue.

"That's the theory," Malaguti said.

Malaguti said they do PILOTS for specific taxpayers who are exempt from paying taxes.

The Town Council approved the PILOT agreement with New Balance.

Communications

were going on in one place," Small said.

One way to measure how they are doing with communication was through surveys. One of the questions asked was how satisfied people are with communication from the district office, which about 95% of survey respondents said they were satisfied or highly satisfied with.

"Schools had a similar response," Small said.

Another question that was asked was where people get their information from. Small said according to the survey results, about 96% of respondents get their information from email, about 74% get it from texting, 11.8% get their information from the website, and about 10.6% get their information from social media.

One increase in activity the district has seen when it comes to communication is Instagram, something Small said teachers are using more of to show off students' achievements.

After looking at the data and hearing feedback from parents and the community, Small said it was decided that they would have all their official information on their website knowing that not everyone uses social media.

"At the root of all of this, the website really is where official information is and email is what comes from the schools because either people love social media or they don't," Small said.

School Board member, Amanda Butcher, said she thought they have done a good job at promoting the school district and what is happening through the communications committee.

"I think we really needed to kind of show what was going on globally within our schools and I think that you worked so hard with the whole team to do that," Butcher said.

25 at 4 p.m.

For commercial properties, Hamilton stated that some things like apartments without low income have had a significant change in value while some offices have gone down in value compared to residential.

"It's a mixed bag when it comes to commercial properties," Hamilton said.

Even though some homes may have gone up in value as part of the revaluation, Hamilton explained that there is a chance the tax rate could decrease, which was the case in 2021.

It was explained by Hamilton that once they determine the final valuation of the town as a whole they then divide it by the amount of money that needs to be raised to come up with the tax rate.

Hamilton said they don't have the 2023 tax rate yet and it would be finalized by the Department of Business Revenue in October or November.

Unlike other states, Hamilton said New Hampshire only allows for one tax rate.

In 2022, Hamilton stated that the tax rate was $18.42.

Hamilton added they would go in front of the Town Council in the Fall to have the final revaluation values submitted.

Residents took to social media after the letters were delivered and posts written on LondonderryNH were concerned about the pike in their home values.

Derry Wins Annual First Responders Softball Battle

CHRIS PAUL
LONDONDERRY TIMES

In what has now become an annual tradition during the Old Home Day festivities, Fire and Police Departments from Derry and Londonderry took to the softball field Friday night, testing each town's skills in softball.

For the second straight year, the cross-town rivals from Derry came away with the win, giving the teams a 2-2 split in their overall meetings.

Londonderry First Responders won the first two contests, skipped playing in 2020, during Covid-19, and since then Derry has taken the last two victories in this friendly rivalry.

On Friday night, Aug. 18, the teams met just after the rains soaked the field and played five innings of slow-pitch softball where Derry outlasted the home-field team for a slim 18-16 win.

The Londonderry squad was able to take an early lead in the first, sitting down Derry's first three batters and scoring the first two runs with an inside-the-park homer to lead 2-0.

Derry quickly came back in the second, scoring eight, which Londonderry matched in the bottom of the inning for a 10-8 lead.

The visitors took a 14-10 lead in the third, scoring six unanswered runs in the inning and added four more in the fourth for a 18-10 lead.

In the bottom of that inning, Londonderry scored five, thanks to two inside-the-park homeruns, then blanked Derry in the top of the fifth to trail by just three, going into the bottom of the final inning.

In the bottom of the fifth, Derry's defense and pitching held the home squad to just one run, handing Londonderry the 18-16 defeat.
